Bangum rid by the riverside.
Three young ladies there he spied.

Tell me now what keeps you here.
We're kept here by a wild boar.

There is a wild boar in these woods
And he eats men`s bones and he drinks their blood

If you would this wild boar see
Blow a blast to come to thee.

Slapped the horn unto his mouth.
Blew a blast both north and south.

Old Bangum, he drew his wooden knife.
He swore he`d take that wild boar`s life.

That boar came out in such a dash.
Split his way through oak and ash.

They fought four hours in that day.
Alas that wild boar ran away.

Bangum followed him to his den.
Saw the bones of a thousand men.

Old Bangum, did you win or lose?
He swore by God he`d won his shoes

even thought to be related to King Arthur`s boar fight (before Lancelot et al got tacked onto Arthur`s legend, he did things like hunt killer boars and kings)

some believe the wooden knife indicates that this was a witch in the form of a boar rather than a natural beast – similar to the vampire superstitions about killing them with wooden stake.
